The ORU Library is a key resource for all students, providing access to many thousands of books, journals and other types of resources.

Let's begin by learning to search for books and eBooks.

The link to the catalog is under the "Find Books" menu on the library web page.

* You can also search the catalog from the quick search box on the main web page.

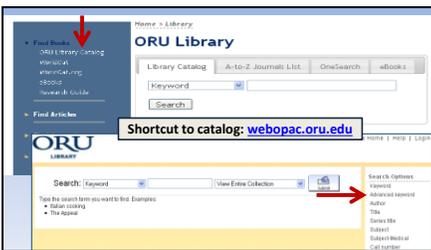

The ORU Library provides access to more than 100,000 eBooks, available online any time you need them from any internet connection in the world.

Search for eBooks from the the tab labeled eBooks in quick search the box.

You can search by keyword, subject, author, or title.

Note: this does not search within the full text of the eBooks.

You can find more search options by accessing the library catalog, from the link under the Find Books menu.

The maximum searching options are available by clicking the Advanced Keyword option on the library catalog page.

You may want to bookmark the catalog so you can go directly to it when you want to search for books.

On the Advanced Search page, * you can search multiple fields, and * limit your results to eBooks or other formats.

You can also limit by language and date of publication.

Here is an example of a search for Bible commentaries available to you as eBooks.
To access the ebook, click the title link.

On the next page you will click a link to access the full book. If you haven't already logged in through Off-Campus Access, you'll be prompted at that point for your Novell username and password.

For more information on eBooks, * you can also visit the Research Guide under the Find Books menu.
Select the tab labeled eBooks/eReference

A guide to downloading and using eBooks is linked to this page

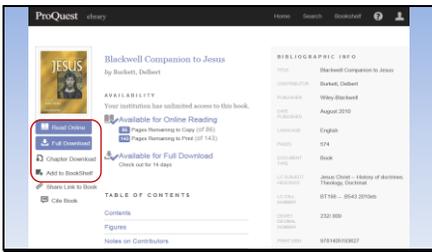

Let's look at some of the eBook collections. Ebrary is our largest collection, with over 125,000 books.
Use the Quick Start Guide to learn how to navigate ebrary.

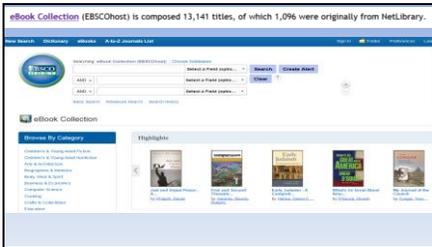

By accessing this collection directly, you can search for words in the full text of every book in the collection.

You can download these books for offline use, but it is usually more convenient to download the chapters or pages you need, because the full download automatically expires at the end of the checkout period, along with any notes or highlights you have made in the book while it was checked out to you. The page or chapter downloads may be kept indefinitely. If you add a book to your bookshelf, it will always be there when you log in, along with any bookmarks, highlights or notes.

The eBook Collection on EBSCOhost has nearly 10,000 titles. You can also browse by subject or search the full text of this collection.

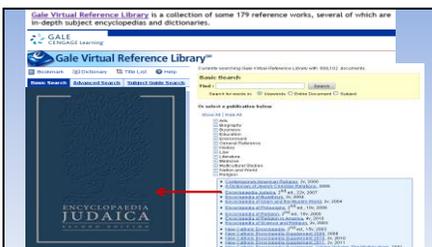

You can search for key words within the full text of every eBook in this collection. Individual or groups of pages can be printed or downloaded.

There are many Reference books in the two eBook collections we just looked at, but we also have two eBook collections that are specifically Reference books. Credo Reference has over 700 online reference books. This is a great place to go for definitions from specialized dictionaries

Like the other eBook collections, you can search for words or phrases in the full text of the books and download or print the pages you need.

The Gale Virtual Reference Library has a smaller collection, but several of the sources in this collection are in-depth specialized sources, such as * Encyclopaedia Judaica.

Another reference book in the Gale collection is Contemporary American Religion. Here is an example of an article on pastoral counseling from this book. You can download the article text or in PDF format.

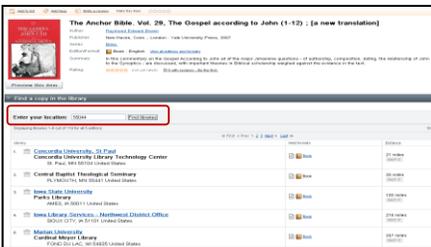

There are times when it is helpful to know how to find books available in other libraries. This is especially helpful for Distance Learners. There may be a university or seminary library near you that can be a helpful resource.

When you need to find a book not available in our collection, you have several options.

WorldCat is a database which combines the catalogs of most US and some international libraries.

WorldCat is available free at www.worldcat.org, and also on the ORU library database list.

By entering your zip code, you can find the library nearest you that owns this book.

We recommend that you contact the library to inquire about guest access options. Most state university libraries are open to the public, but many private institutions have restrictions. Check out privileges aren't usually available, so you may only be able to use the resources on site and make copies to take home.

Here are some options for when there isn't a library near you and you need something right away.

Google advanced book search allows you to search for books with previews or full text available.

If the preview is very small, you may be able to see more by making multiple visits and searching different words within the book each time.

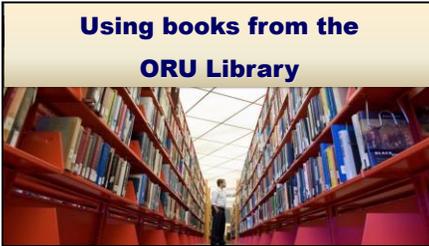

Online book sellers like Amazon and Barnes and Noble often offer sample pages. Again, you can sometimes see more pages on subsequent visits.

Many Distance Learners save time and money by using the Interlibrary Loan service of their local public library. Many public libraries will borrow books for you from another library at little or no cost.

If a print book is in the ORU Library, you can request that pages from it be scanned and sent to you. You can identify the book by searching the catalog, or ask for recommended sources for your topic. Here is the Dictionary of Pastoral Care and Counseling. You can email your request to LibDist@oru.edu or...

...use the form on the Distance Learner Library Services web page to make your request. Either way, we can usually have the pages scanned and emailed to you within one business day.

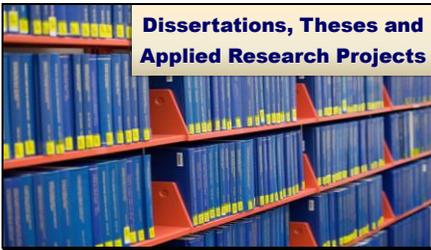

If you don't know the page numbers or the name of the article, provide as much information as you have. For instance, for a Bible commentary, you may give the scripture reference and we will scan the pages that relate to that passage.

Distance Learners can request to have circulating books checked out and mailed to them. Articles are emailed to Distance Learners at no cost, but Distance Learners are responsible for postage costs for books. Books are checked out for 28 days and can be renewed online. An alternative which may save time and money is to use the Interlibrary Loan service at your local public library to borrow books. Fees vary, but they are often less than the postage costs of borrowing from ORU.

More information on borrowing books is available on the Distance Learner Library Services web site.

To find a dissertation or applied research project owned by the ORU library, search the library catalog.

The catalog will show how many copies we own and where they are located. If the Status says "Available" it can be checked out.

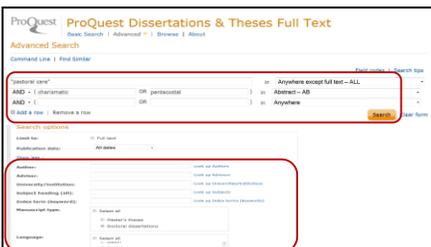

Many are available to download or read online by clicking the link provided.

To search for dissertations and theses online, go to the Database List and click Dissertations & Theses under Databases by Type.

The Proquest Dissertations & Theses database has the full text of over a million dissertations from all over the world.

You can search the database by keyword, or look for dissertations from a specific institution or by author.

For most dissertations published since 1990, the full text is available for download.
